Customer-facing technology professional living a mile from Bay Street. Three years running my own consulting practice, where I greet customers, discover needs, recommend solutions, and support them after the sale. I am the person friends and family call when a Mac, iPhone, or iPad needs setting up, moving over, or fixing. I want to do that for people every day with the technology I so enjoy. The part I like is selling someone on something that makes them ooh and aah the same way I did when I first used it. Fully open availability, including nights, weekends, and holidays. I am committing to the full season and I show up for the shifts I am given.

Core Strengths

- Customer service and curiosity: sole point of contact for every consulting client, from first conversation through delivery and support; I run discovery sessions whose whole purpose is asking better questions until the customer's real need surfaces
- Personalizing solutions and clear communication: I match what I recommend to the person in front of me rather than pitching a catalog, and have spent eight years turning technical detail into plain language for non-technical customers
- Apple products and the ecosystem: Daily Mac, iPhone, and iPad ecosystem user, so I can sell the value from experience. I am also the default person in my family and friend group for device setup, data migration, iCloud, and troubleshooting
- Fast pace and shared accountability: I support several customers at once while keeping my own schedule and billing straight, and I take direction from the people who know the floor better than I do
- Languages: English (native), Spanish (conversational)
